LĪ'BEL-OŪS, { a. Relating to a libel: LĪ'BEL-LOŪS, } defamatory.

LĪB'ER-AL, a. [Lat. liberalis; liber, free.] 1. Bestowing with a free hand. 2. Not narrow or contracted in mind; catholic. 3. Bestowed with a free hand; not confined or restricted. 4. Not bound by established tenets in politics or religion; evincing, or caused by, such a spirit.

SYN.—Generous.—Liberal is free-born, and generous is high-born. The former is opposed to the ordinary feelings of a servile state, and implies largeness of spirit in giving, judging, acting, &c. The latter expresses that nobleness of soul which is peculiarly appropriate to those of high rank—a spirit that goes out of self, and finds its enjoyment in consulting the feelings and happiness of others. Generosity is measured by the extent of the sacrifices it makes; liberality, by the warmth of feeling which it manifests.

—n. One who advocates greater freedom, especially in politics or religion.

LĪB'ER-AL-ĪSM, n. Liberal principles or feelings.

LĪB'ER-ĀL'I-TY, n. 1. Munificence; bounty. 2. A donation; a gratuity. 3. Largeness of mind; candor; impartiality.

LĪE, n. 1. An intentional violation of truth. 2. Any thing which misleads or disappoints.

SYN. — Untruth; falsehood. — A man may state what is untrue from ignorance or misconception; but to say he lies is to charge him with the highest dishonor. Hence, the word untruth is sometimes used as a softened expression when we do not wish to make the charge of lying in the grossest form.

— v. i. 1. [LIED; LYING.] [O. Eng. lee, A.-S. leógan.] To utter falsehood with an intention to deceive. 2. [LAY; LAIN; LYING.] [A.-S. ligan, ligean, liggan, Goth. ligan, Icel. liggia.] To be in a horizontal position, or nearly so. 3. To be situated. 4. To remain. 5. To belong; to consist. 6. To lodge; to sleep. 7. To be capable of being maintained.

SYN. — To lay. — Lay is a transitive verb, and has for its preterit laid; as, he told me to lay it down, and I laid it down. Lie is intransitive, and has for its preterit lay; as, he told me to lie down, and I lay down. Some persons blunder by using laid for the preterit of lie; as, he told me to lie down, and I laid down. So persons often say, the ship laid at anchor; they laid by during the storm; the book laid on the shelf, &c. It is only necessary to remember, in all such cases, that laid is the preterit of lay, and not of lie.

SYN. — Under. — It has always been English usage to say "under one's signature," as we say "under one's hand," "under one's seal." Some, in this country, have imagined "over one's signature" to be more correct, not considering that the reference is to the paper containing the instrument or mass of thought to be verified. This is under the hand in signing, as it is under the seal when affixed, though, in either case, the written words may be above. Thus the three phrases all stand on the same footing, and if one is changed, all must be changed.

SYN. — Corpulent. — Stout, in our early writers, was used chiefly or wholly in the sense of strong or bold; as, a stout champion, a stout heart, a stout resistance. At a later period it was used for thick-set or bulky; and more recently, especially in England, the idea has been carried still further, so that Taylor says in his Synonyms, "The stout man has the proportions of an ox: he is corpulent, fat, and fleshy in relation to his size." Few in America entirely drop the original sense; and many who have read Washington Irving's story of the "Stout Gentleman" never suspected that he was merely a very fat man.

— n. A strong kind of beer.

STÖUT'LY, adv. Lustily; boldly; obstinately. [stout.]

SYN.—Concise.—Terse was defined by Johnson "cleanly written," i. e., free from blemishes, neat, or smooth. Its present sense is compact, with smoothness, grace, or elegance, as in the following lines of Whitehead:—

"In eight terse lines has Phædrus told
(So frugal were the bards of old)
A tale of goats; and closed with grace,
Plan, moral, all, in that short space."
It differs from concise in not implying perhaps quite as much condensation, but chiefly in the additional idea of "grace or elegance."

SYN. — See JUDGE.

ŮN. [A.-S. un, allied to Gr. ἀν, ἀ, Skr. an, a, Lat. in.] A negative prefix which may be attached at will to almost any English adjective, or participle used adjectively, while it is also attached to less numerous classes of nouns and verbs. As the former class of words is unlimited in extent, and such compounds may be formed by any writer or speaker from almost all the adjectives and participles in the language, very many of them will be omitted from this Dictionary, more especially such as are negations of the simple word, and are explained by prefixing a not to the latter; also, derivatives of these words in ly and ness. A pretty full list of these words is subjoined.

Un is prefixed to adjectives, or to words used adjectively; as, (1.) To adjectives, to denote the absence of the quality designated by the adjective; as, *unaccordant, unalterable, unambitious, unanxious, unappreciable, unapproachable, unartificial, unattainable, unbearable, unbrotherly, uncandid, uncanonical, unchangeable, uncheerful, unclassical, uncommercial, uncongenial, uncordial, uncourtly, undefinable, undemocratic, undesirable, underout, undistinguishable, undutiful, unendurable, un-English, unenviable, uneventful, unfamiliar, unfeminine, unfraternal, ungenial, ungenteel, ungentle, ungentlemanly, ungrammatical, unimportant, uninhabitable, unintelligible, unjustifiable, unkingly, unmaidenly, unmanageable, unmeet, unmelodious, unmindful, unmotherly, unmusical, unobservant, unpardonable, unpatriotic, unphilanthropic, unphilosophic, unpoetic, unpronounceable, unquenchable, unrational, unremunerative, unromantic, unsalable, unsatisfactory, unscholarly, unscientific, unselfish, unserviceable, unsubstantial, unsuspicious, untenable, unthankful, untidy, unvocal, unwarlike, unwatchful, unwearied, unwelcome, unwomanly, unworlily, and the like. (2.) To past passive participles, to indicate the absence of the condition or state expressed by the participle; as, *unabated, unabridged, unaccented, undorned, unadulterated, unaided, unaltered, unanswered, unappreciated, unarmed, unasked, unassisted, unattempted, unattended, unbaptized, unbiased, unbleached, unbought, uncalled, unchanged, *unchecked, uncircumcised, unclouded, uncompounded, unconfining, uncongealed, unconquered, unconstrained, uncultivated, undecided, undefended, undefiled, undeserved, undesigned, undigested, undiminished, undimmed, undisguised, undisturbed, uneducated, unemployed, unenlightened, unexhausted, unexplained, unexplored, unfathomed, unforeseen, unfulfilled, unfurnished, unguarded, unguessed, unharned, unheeded, unhelped, unhonored, unimpeached, uninclosed, uninhabited, uninspired, unleavened, unlettered, unloved, unmarried, unmasked, unmatched, unmingled, unmitigated, unmixed, unmoved, unmoved, unnoticed, unobserved, unobstructed, unornamented, unperceived, unpolished, unpracticed, unpremeditated, unprepared, unprotected, unprovoked, unpunished, unread, unreconciled, unrefined, unrelated, unreconciled, unresisted, unrewarded, unsatisfied, unscathed, unsettled, unshared, unsheltered, unshod, unshorn, unskilled, unsolicited, unsought, unstinted, unstudied, unsullied, unsurpassed, unsuspected, untasted, untaught, unterrified, untried, untutored, unvaried, unwarranted, unwedded, unwept, and the like. (3.) To present participles which come from intransitive verbs, or are themselves employed as adjectives, to mark the absence of the activity, disposition, or condition implied by the participle; as *unaccommodating, unaspiring, unavailing, unblenching, uncalculating, unchanging, uncomplaining, unconsuming, unconvinced, undeserving, undiminishing, undiscerning, undoubting, unedifying, unenvying, unfading, unfaltering, unflinching, ungrudging, unheeding, uninteresting, uninviting, unloving, unmoving, unobscuring, unoffending, unpitiful, unpleasing, unquestioning, unrepining, unresisting, unresting, unsearching, unseeing, unshrinking, unsuspecting, unsympathizing, unvarying, unwavering, and the like.

SYN. — Prudence. — Wisdom has been defined to be the "use of the best means for attaining the best ends," and in this sense implies the union of high mental and moral excellence. Prudence is of a more negative character; it rather consists in avoiding danger than in taking decisive measures for the accomplishment of an object. Sir Robert Walpole was in many respects a prudent statesman, but he was far from being a wise one. Burke has remarked that prudence, when carried too far, degenerates into a "reptile virtue," which is the more dangerous for the plausible appearance it wears.

WISE, a. [-ER; -EST.] [A.-S. wîs, allied to wit, v. i.] 1. Having knowledge; learned. 2. Making due use of knowledge; discerning and judging soundly. 3. Versed in art or science. 4. Godly; pious. 5. Dictated or guided by wisdom.

WIT, v. i. [A.-S. witan.] To know; — now used only in the infinitive to wit, a phrase equivalent to namely, that is to say. — n. [A.-S. witt, wit.] 1. Mind; intellect; sense. 2. A mental faculty. 3. Association of objects not usually connected, so as to produce a pleasant surprise; also, the power of readily combining objects in such a manner. 4. A person of eminent sense, knowledge, or genius; one distinguished for bright or amusing sayings.

SYN.—Humor.—Wit formerly meant genius, and now denotes the power of seizing on some thought or occurrence, and, by a sudden turn, presenting it under aspects wholly new and unexpected—apparently natural and admissible, if not perfectly just, and bearing on the subject, or the parties concerned, with a laughable keenness and force. "What I want," said a pompous orator, aiming at his antagonist, "is common sense." "Exactly!" was the whispered reply. The pleasure we find in wit arises from the ingenuity of the turn, the sudden surprise it brings, and the patness of its application to the case, in the new and ludicrous relations thus flashed upon the view. Humor is a quality more congenial than wit to the English mind. It consists primarily in taking up the peculiarities of a humorist, and drawing them out, so that we enjoy a hearty, good-natured laugh at the unconscious development he makes of his whims and oddities. From this original sense, the term has been widened to embrace other sources of kindly mirth of the same general character. In a well-known caricature upon English reserve, an Oxford student is represented as standing on the brink of a river, greatly agitated at the sight of a drowning man, and crying out, "O that I had been introduced to this gentleman, that I might save his life!" The "Silent Woman" of Ben Johnson is one of the most humorous productions, in the original sense of the term, which we have in our language.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

RULES

FOR PRONOUNCING THE VOWELS AND CONSONANTS OF GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

RULES FOR THE VOWELS.

1. Any vowel at the end of an accented syllable, and e, o, and u, at the end of an unaccented syllable, have the long English sound; as, Ca'to, Ce'crops, Di'do, So'lon, Cu'mæ, Me-lis'sa, Mo-los'sus, Tu-lin'gi; in which words the final vowels of the first syllables have the same sound as the corresponding vowels in the first syllables of the English words pa'per, ce'dar, si'lent, co'lon, du'ty.

2. A ending an unaccented syllable has the sound of a in fa'ther or in last; as, Ga-bi'na, A-re'ne, pronounced Gah-bi'nah, Ah-re'ne.

3. I ending a final syllable has the long sound, as To'mi. At the end of initial unaccented syllables it varies, somewhat indefinitely, between i long, as I-u'lus, and i short (like i in pin), as in I-ta'li-a. In all other cases i ending an unaccented syllable has its short sound, as in pin.

4. Y is pronounced as i would be in the same situation.

5. Æ and æ are pronounced as e would be in the same situation.

6. If a syllable end in a consonant, the vowel has the short English sound; as, Bal'bus, Del'phi, Cin'na, Mos'chus, Tus'cus, in which the vowels have the same sounds as in the English words man'ner, sel'dom, din'ner, scof'fer, mus'ter.

EXCEPTION. — E in final es is pronounced as in the familiar proper name An'des (än'deez).

RULES FOR THE CONSONANTS.

7. C before e, i, y, æ, and æ, is pronounced like s; before a, o, and u, and before consonants, like k; as Ce'a, Cic'e-ro, Cy'prus, Cæ'sar, Cæ'li-a, Ca'to, Co'cles, Cu'mæ.

8. G before e, i, y, æ, or another g followed by e, has the sound of j; before a, o, and u, and before consonants other than g, as above excepted, the hard sound, as in the English words gave, gone; as, Ge'lo, Gi-gan'tes, Gy-gæ'us, Ag'ger, Ga'bi-i, Gor'gi-as, Sa-gun'tum.

9. Ch has the sound of k, but it is silent before a mute consonant at the beginning of a word; as, Chtho'nia, pronounced Tho'ni-a.

10. T, s, and c, before ia, ie, ii, io, iu, and eu, preceded immediately by the accent, in Latin words, as in English, change into sh and zh. But when the t follows s, t, or z, or when the accent falls on the first of the vowels following, the consonant preserves its pure sound; as, Sal-lus'ti-us, Brut'ti-i, Mil-ti'a-des, &c. T in the termination tion also retains its original sound; as, The-o-do'ti-on.

11. S has, in general, the sound of s in this. Final s preceded by e, or a liquid, has the sound of z.

12. Initial x has the sound of z.

13. Initial ph before a mute is silent; as, Phthi'a, pronounced Thi'a. Initial p before s is silent; as, Psy'che, pronounced Sy'ke. Initial p before t is silent; as, Ptol-e-mæ'us, pronounced Tol-e-mæ'us.

14. At the beginning of words we frequently find the uncombinable consonants mn, tm, &c.; as, Mne-mos'y-ne, Tmo'lus, &c. These are to be pronounced with the first consonant mute, as if written Ne-mos'y-ne, Mo'lus, &c.

REMARK. 1. The termination eus, derived from the third declension of Greek contracts in eus, although usually made a single syllable in poetry, is resolved into two syllables in the Table. This is also done by Walker and Trollope; is defended by Labbe and Carr; and may be conceded to the exigencies of poetry. The other syllabication, by which eus has the sound of use, as in the noun abuse, is also given; and should be followed in pronunciation in all ordinary cases.

2. The names in Italics are the Anglicized forms of the classical names above them. Each for himself must judge whether to adhere to the classical pronunciation or not.

3. Diacritical marks are used, in this Vocabulary, to indicate the soft sounds of c, g, and s, in some cases, as in Aç'i-da'li-a, Æ-gæ'tri-a, A-ehil'les; also when n has the sound of ng, as in An'cho-x.

The abbreviations Pw., F., K., Pe., Fac., S., Py., C., L., B., For., Sch., W., M., and Fr., stand, respectively, for the following authorities, viz., Passow, Freund, Klotz, Pape, Facciolati, Smith, Pauly, Carr, Labbe, Bischoff & Möller, Forbiger, Scheller, Walker, Müller, and Frißlink.

The figures which follow certain words in the Vocabulary refer to corresponding Rules of Pronunciation. The figure 6, for example, appended to Abantes, refers to Rule 6, which shows that the vowel in the last syllable has its long English sound.

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

THE following Vocabulary contains a careful selection of such Scripture names as present any difficulty of pronunciation; but classical names occurring in the Scriptures, and given in the preceding vocabulary of Greek and Latin names, are for the most part omitted. That mode of pronunciation which is deemed to be best supported, is given first, and any other pronunciation which has, to any considerable extent, the sanction of present and reputable usage, is subjoined as an alternative mode. The names have been accented, divided into syllables, and marked in accordance with the system of notation employed in the previous part of this work. The consulter will not, therefore, require any Rules to guide him to a correct pronunciation of the names here given, but with reference to those which are omitted, it will be well for him to remember, —

1. That, in words of two syllables, the accent is uniformly on the first.
2. That, in words of two syllables in which the accented vowel is separated from the next syllable by only one consonant or by a consonant digraph, the consonant or the digraph goes to the following syllable; as, A'din, Jo'tham.
3. That ch always has the sound of k.
4. That g is always hard, as in go.
5. That every final i forming — with or without a preceding consonant — a distinct syllable, has its long sound; as in A'i, Ab'di.
6. That the terminations ites and enes (as in Gil'e-ad-ites, Gad'a-renes, &c.) are pronounced in one syllable.
7. That in other respects Scripture names usually follow the analogy of Latin pronunciation. See p. 487.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARIES

MODERN GEOGRAPHICAL AND BIOGRAPHICAL NAMES.

BY J. THOMAS, M. D.,

AUTHOR OF THE SYSTEM OF GEOGRAPHICAL PRONUNCIATION IN LIPPINCOTT'S GAZETTEER OF THE WORLD.

ELEMENTS OF PRONUNCIATION

OF THE PRINCIPAL MODERN LANGUAGES OF CONTINENTAL EUROPE.

VOWELS.

1. In the languages of Continental Europe, a never has a sound like that in the English words fate or name, but is usually like the a in far or father, often approximating that in fat. In Hungarian it is sometimes like o in not.

2. E generally has a sound similar to a in fate, or else to e in met. In French it is often silent. In Swedish, e, when long, has a sound resembling that of short i, but more prolonged. Thus, Carlén might be pronounced kar-lēn'. When short, it is like e in met.

3. I usually sounds as in marine; that is, like long e in English. It is sometimes like our short i, as in pin. It is important to observe that i final in French, Italian, and Spanish, has the full, clear sound of ee in see; it should therefore not be allowed to fall into ɪ, as it is apt to do in English or Anglicized words.

4. O has for the most part nearly the same sound as in English. Sometimes it is long, as in no, but often it has a sound intermediate between that of our o in no and that in not. In Russian, o, when not accented, is very short, almost like a in father, or intermediate between this and that in fat. In Swedish and Norwegian, at the end of a syllable, it is sounded like our oo.

5. U in most languages is pronounced like the English oo. In French (and in Dutch when it ends a syllable) it may be said to combine the sounds of our oo and long e. If the speaker, after placing his lips in the position for pronouncing oo, endeavors, without moving his lips, to utter the sound of ee, that of the French u will be produced.

6. Y is usually like i, that is, like our e. In Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish, it sounds like the French u or German ü. In Polish it resembles our short i, as in pin. In Dutch it is like our long i. It may be observed, that, according to the modern Dutch orthography, ij is substituted for y. Thus, the old spelling Overijssel is replaced by Overijssel, Bilderdyk by Bilderdijk, &c.

DIPHTHONGS.

7. Aa in Danish usually sounds nearly like our a in fall, sometimes approaching o long. Ä (ä) in Swedish sounds like long o in English.

8. Ae, or ä, is usually pronounced like a in fate, or e in met. In Dutch and Flemish ae sounds like a in far. In the modern Dutch orthography, ae is replaced by aa. Thus, the name formerly written Haerlem, is now Haarlem, Maes is changed into Maas, &c.

9. Ai and ay are usually proper diphthongs, being compounded of the sound of a as in far and i as in fig, thus nearly corresponding in sound to our long i. In French, and in Modern Greek, they are pronounced nearly like ay in the English word day; that is, like the long a in fate.

10. Au has generally the sound of ow in now. In French au and eau have the sound of long o.

11. Ei and ey are generally proper diphthongs, uniting the sounds of a in fate and e in me, being similar to ay in day when this word is pronounced very full. In German they are like our long i; in French, nearly like our e in met, or a in fate.

12. Eu in French and Dutch has a sound nearly similar to u in the English word fur, but somewhat more prolonged. This sound is intermediate between that of the English short u and that of the German ö. (See 14.) In German eu and äu have the sound of oi in English.

13. Ie at the end of a word is always pronounced in French like e in the English word me. In German it is frequently so pronounced. In the middle of a word, ie, both in Dutch and German, always sounds like our long e.

14. Oe, or ö, occurs in several European languages. In Danish, however, instead of two dots being placed over the o, a mark is drawn obliquely through it (φ). The sound is unlike any thing we have in English, but is nearest to that of u in fur, or e in her. If, while the lips are retained in the position proper for forming o long, the speaker tries to utter the sound of e in met (or a in fate), he will produce the sound of ö. [This sound, as well as that of the French u, should, if possible, be learned from an oral instructor.] In Dutch, oe sounds like our oo.

15. Oi in French is usually sounded like wä; moi is pronounced müä; roi, riwä; &c. Oi in the termination of certain adjectives, was formerly used instead of ai, and was pronounced like this diphthong. Now, however, oi in such words is almost universally replaced by ai. Thus, instead of François, Françoise (French), the forms Français and Française are now used.

16. Ou in French and in Modern Greek sounds like our oo; in Dutch and Norwegian, like ow in the English word now, or like ou in house. In Portuguese it is pronounced nearly like long o.

17. Ue or ü, has the sound of the French u. (See 5.)

 A double vowel, in foreign words, is generally equivalent to the single vowel prolonged.

CONSONANTS.

The consonants in the languages of Continental Europe are, for the most part, similar in sound to the same letters in English. The following exceptions may be mentioned:—

18. B at the end of a word in German is pronounced like p. Between two vowels in Spanish its sound is somewhat similar to v, with which it is often interchanged; as, Cordoba, Car'ova, &c. This sound of b is formed by bringing the lips loosely or feebly into contact.

19. C before e and i in Italian is pronounced like ch in the English word chill; in the same position in Spanish it sounds like the Spanish z or like our th in thin. In German, c before e, i, and y is pronounced like the German z, or like ts in English. In Polish it has the same sound, even at the end of a word.

20. D at the end of a word in German and Dutch is pronounced like t. In Spanish and Danish, between two vowels or at the end of a word, it has a sound similar to th in this.

21. In all the European languages g is hard before a, o, and u; in German, Danish, Norwegian, and Polish, it is hard in every situation, though it sometimes has a guttural sound. Before e and i (or y), in French, Portuguese, Spanish, and Swedish, it is like the j of these languages. In the same position in Italian it sounds like our j, or soft g. In Dutch it is always pronounced like h strongly aspirated. Gu before e and i, in French, Portuguese, and Spanish, sounds like g hard.

22. H in French, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese, is either never pronounced at all, or else is sounded so slightly that an English ear can scarcely perceive it. In the other languages of Europe it has the same sound as in English.

23. J in Italian, German, Polish, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, and Dutch, is pronounced like our y. In French and Portuguese it has the sound of zh, or s in the English word pleasure. In Spanish it is equivalent to x, being similar in sound to a strongly aspirated h.

24. Often at the end of a syllable, in French and Portuguese, m and n are said to have a nasal sound; but, more correctly speaking, dropping their own proper character, they impart nasality to the preceding vowels, which are then sounded through the nose. For example, ban in French approximates in sound that indicated by bōng in English. Alem or alen, in Portuguese is pronounced almost a-lēng'. In pronouncing the nasal vowels in these languages, care should be used not to press the back part of the tongue against the palate, as is done in producing the sound of the English ng. In French, o before n nasal has nearly the sound of our o in note, but is somewhat shorter. That is to say, if the English word no be pronounced quickly, with the vowel rendered nasal, the sound produced will correspond almost exactly to that of the French non. N in Italian before g usually preserves its clear sound; hence Marengo is pronounced almost mā-renn'go; in all or nearly all the other languages, n in such cases approximates the sound of the English n in link.

25. Ñ in Spanish (like gn in French and Italian, and nh in Portuguese) has a sound combining that of n and y consonant. Mino and Minho are pronounced alike—meen'yo.

26. Qu before e and i in Portuguese and Spanish, and before every vowel in French, has the sound of k. In most other languages it is essentially the same as in English.

27. R in most European languages is trilled more strongly than in English, particularly at the end of a word or syllable. In pronouncing it, the tip of the tongue is made to approach very near to the roots of the upper teeth.

28. S in many European tongues, when between two vowels, is very soft, having the sound of our z, or one very near it. In German it is usually pronounced soft at the beginning of a word. In Hungarian it sounds like our sh, or the German sch.

29. T in several European tongues has a sound somewhat more dental than in English. This is especially observable in Spanish, in which language it is pronounced by putting the tip of the tongue against the upper teeth.

30. W in German and some other languages is nearly similar to our v. It may be described as a v uttered with the lips alone, without the aid of the teeth.

31. X in Spanish generally sounds like a strongly aspirated h. (See 23.) In Portuguese it is pronounced like our sh.

32. Z in German and Swedish has the sound of ts; in Italian, z usually sounds like dz, zz like ts. In Spanish it is pronounced like the English th in thin.

COMBINED CONSONANTS.

33. Ch in Spanish has the same sound as in the English word chill. In Italian, it is pronounced like k; in German, Polish, and some other languages, it has a guttural sound, somewhat similar to a strongly aspirated h. This sound must be learned from an oral instructor. In French (except in the case of some words derived from the Greek), and in Portuguese, ch has the sound of our sh.

34. Cs in Hungarian sounds like ch in the English word church.

35. Cz in Polish sounds like our ch; in Hungarian, like ts.

36. Dy in Hungarian blends the sounds of d and consonant y, and hence approximates the sound of our j. The same combination occurs in some English words, as in soldier, verdure, &c. (See 44.)

37. Gh in Italian is like gh in the English word ghost, or g in game.

38. Gl in Italian, when followed by i, has the same sound as lh in Portuguese, or ll in Spanish. Before a, o, or u, the i following gl is silent. (See 41.)

39. Gn in French and Italian (like ñ in Spanish) combines the sounds of n and consonant y. (See 25.)

40. Gy in Hungarian blends the sounds of d and y consonant. Magyar is pronounced mōd'yōr'. (See 36.)

41. Lh in Portuguese, and ll in Spanish, combine the sounds of l and y consonant. For example, velho is pronounced vel'yo; villa, vel'yä; llano, lyä'no. Ly in Hungarian has also the sound of ll in Spanish. Ll in French, when preceded by i, was formerly, in certain words, sounded like the Spanish ll; but according to the modern popular pronunciation, all sound of the l in such words is dropped. Aurillac, formerly ō'rēl'yäk', is now generally sounded ō're'yäk'; Bouillon, formerly bool'yōn', is now boo'yōn', &c. It may be observed, however, that public speakers, and others who aim to be very correct in their pronunciation, still frequently retain the sound of the l.

42. Nh in Portuguese is pronounced like the Spanish ñ. (See 25 and 39.) Ny in Hungarian has the same sound.

43. Sc in Italian, before e and i, sounds like the English sh.

44. Sz in Hungarian is sounded like sharp s or ss; but zs is like our zh. In Polish, sz sounds like our sh.

45. Sch in German is pronounced like sh in English; in Italian, before e and i, it sounds like sk in English, and in Dutch, before all the vowels, its sound is similar, but harsher and more guttural.

46. Th in all the modern languages of Continental Europe except Greek (in which the character θ has the same sound as our th), is pronounced like simple t, or like th in the English word thyme.

47. Ts in Hungarian is like cs in the same language; that is, like our ch in church.

48. Ty in Hungarian blends the sounds of t and consonant y; it approaches in sound our ch. A similar combination of t with the sound of consonant y takes place in the English words creature, righteous, virtue.

ACCENT.

49. By accent is usually meant, in English, that particular impulse or stress of the voice which, in pronunciation, is placed upon certain syllables of a word; for example, on the last syllable in confer and retain, on the second in America, and on the first and last in evermore. Many words in English (like the one last cited) have two accents; but one is always predominant, and is termed the primary accent; the other is called the secondary accent.

Something analogous to English accentuation is found in nearly all languages. In the Teutonic tongues, especially, the accent is essentially the same as in English, a large number of the polysyllabic words having both the primary and secondary accent, as Son'ders-hau'sen, Zoll've-rein'.

It is very difficult, if not impossible, to give any general rules, that would be of much practical utility, for placing the accent on foreign words or names. Among what may be termed the principal European languages (viz., English, French, German, Italian, Russian, and Spanish), there is scarcely one general rule for accent to which there are not a multitude of exceptions. Those of most general application are perhaps the following: In Spanish and Portuguese, words ending in a vowel usually have the accent on the penultima; those ending in a consonant are generally accented on the last syllable; yet even to these there are numerous exceptions; e. g., Alcalá, Córdova, Andújar, Cádiz, &c.

50. In Spanish, the difference between accented and unaccented syllables, though sufficiently obvious to a native, is sometimes scarcely perceptible to a foreigner.

51. In Hungarian, there is no accent, according to our use of this word; but the syllables are distinguished from each other by quantity, being, like the Latin, divided into long and short. But as quantity in Latin and Greek is converted into accent by the usage of English pronunciation, so, in giving Hungarian names in the following Vocabularies, the accent is placed according to quantity whenever this could be satisfactorily ascertained.

52. The French language also has no accent, in the sense in which we employ the term. The marks called accents that are placed over the different vowels, serve only to indicate some particular sound of these letters, and not that peculiar impulse of the voice which characterizes an accented syllable in the English and most other European tongues. Thus, the accent over the e in parlé serves to show that this vowel has its first French sound, and at the same time distinguishes it from parle, another form of the same verb, in which the e is mute. The circumflex imparts to the vowels over which it is placed a longer and deeper sound than ordinary; e. g., in hâte, tempête, gîte, and apôtre.

It is commonly said that the French pronounce all the syllables of a word with an equal stress of voice, but that they seem to an English ear to accentuate the last, because in our language the universal tendency is to throw the accent toward the beginning of the word. Accordingly, the principal accent has been placed on the last syllable of French names; at the same time it has been thought proper to mark the others with secondary accents, in order to prevent them from being pronounced too slightly or indistinctly, as is usually the case with unaccented syllables in English. The pronunciation of Orléans, for example, has been thus given — or'lā'ōn'.

EXPLANATION OF ABBREVIATIONS AND SIGNS

EMPLOYED IN THE VOCABULARIES OF MODERN GEOGRAPHICAL AND BIOGRAPHICAL NAMES.

* * The figures refer to the Elements of Pronunciation given above.

Ar. Arabic.	Port. Portuguese.
Flem. Flemish.	pron. pronunciation.
Fr. French.	Russ. Russian.
Ger. German.	Sp. Spanish.
Hung. Hungarian.	Sw. Swedish.
Norw. Norwegian.	Syn. Synonym.
Turk. Turkish.

g, g, i, q, marked with this sign [] underneath, have an obscure sound similar to that of short u, but are usually considerably shorter, and, indeed, sometimes are almost mute: thus, Grät'tan might be pronounced grät'tün or grät't'n; Hël'lér, hël'lur or hël'l'r, &c.

ā, ē, ō are similar in sound to ā, ē, ō, but are not to be pronounced so long.

ä is employed to denote the long sound of ä.

ö has a sound similar to e in her (see 14); it may be Anglicized by e.

ü represents the sound of the German ü and the French u (see 5): it may be Anglicized by the English u.

U, small capital, is intended to represent the sound of the French eu (see 12), which is pronounced nearly like u in the English word fur.

B, small capital, is used to denote the sound of b between two vowels in Spanish, often nearly approximating that of v. (See 18.)

D, small capital, is intended to represent a sound similar to th in this. (See 20.)

G and K, small capitals, indicate a peculiar sound of the German ch, or one similar to it. (See 33.)

H, small capital, has a sound somewhat similar to the preceding, but more resembling a strongly aspirated h.

ĩ (l liquid) is to be pronounced like li in million; it blends the sounds of l and y consonant. (See 41.)

M and N, small capitals, are used in the respelling of French words, to represent the nasal sound of the preceding vowel, and are not themselves to be pronounced. The French nasal vowels are äñ, öñ, õñ. ũñ, being similar in sound to äng, öng, ũng, üng. (See 24.)

ñ is pronounced like ni in minion; it blends the sounds of n and y consonant. (See 25 and 42.)

R, small capital, has nearly the sound of rr in terror, but stronger. (See 27.)

š is used to indicate that the sound of the s is very soft, nearly resembling our z. In the middle of a word it should be pronounced like a soft z.

ŵ has a sound similar to our v. (See 30.) The ˘ over the w is intended to point out its alliance to our v.

y and ey at the end of an unaccented syllable sound like i in pin.

au and aw have the sound of a in fall.

č indicates the clear sound of short i before r, as in the English words spirit, miracle, &c.

ow is to be pronounced like ow in cow, and ou like ou in house. In respelling for pronunciation, ow has been replaced by ou wherever the former combination would be liable to be pronounced like long o, as in grow, tow, &c.

ss is sometimes used to mark the sharp sound of s where a single s would be liable to be pronounced like z; e. g., Mons, mōNSS, not mōNS.

☞ The other marked letters, and the marks denoting the primary and secondary accents, (' , ') are the same as those used in the body of the Dictionary.

do, wolf, toō, took; ūrn, rye, pull; c, ġ, soft; e, ġ, hard; a₂; exist; ŋ as ng; this; ä, ö, ü, ēē, ĩ, ñ, š, ǃ, b, d, g, h, k, n, r, u (see p. 502).

^a Sometimes called Indo-Germanic or Japhetic.

^b The Indian and Iranian branches are often classed together as forming the Indo-Persian or Aryan branch of the family.

^c The Greek and Latin are often joined together as the Græco-Latin, or classical branch.

^d The Slavonic and Lithuanian branches are often classed together as the Letto-Slavic or Windic languages.

^e Divided into four periods, viz., Semi-Saxon (A. D. 1150-1250), Old English (A. D. 1250-1350), Middle English (A. D. 1350-1550), Modern English (A. D. 1550 to the present day).

^f Called also Shemitic and Syro-Arabian.

^g Called also Canaanitic.

Besides the Indo-European and Semitic families, philologists distinguish several others, which may be classed as follows:—

Tartaric (or Tataric) Family (called also Turanian, Scythian, Altaic, Ural-Altaic, and Mongolian), including the numerous and widely different languages of the Manchus, the Mongols, the Turks (in Asia and Europe), the Magyars (in Hungary), the Finns, the Laplanders, the Samoyeds, and a multitude of other tribes. Whether the Tamil and its sister idioms in Ceylon and southern India belong to this family is uncertain; they are grouped together under the name of the Dravidian Family. The Japanese, the Corean, and other tongues spoken in the peninsulas and islands of the extreme north-eastern part of Asia are claimed by some as belonging to the Tartaric Family; but this is very doubtful.

South-eastern Asiatic or Monosyllabic Family in China, and Farther India, and countries adjacent to these (including the Chinese, Siamese, Burmese, Annamese, &c.).

Malay-Polynesian or Oceanic Family, including the languages and dialects spoken in nearly all the islands of the Pacific and Indian oceans.

Hamitic Family, composed of the Egyptian, and its congeners, the Coptic, Galla, Berber, Hottentot (?), &c.

South-African (sometimes called Zingian) Family, filling Africa about the equator and southward to the Cape of Good Hope.

American Family, occupying with its many and greatly varying dialects the whole continent of North and South America.

Besides these great families, there are several isolated languages, or groups of languages, which have hitherto resisted all attempts at classification. Such are the Yenisean in Siberia; the Albanian (or Skipetar) in north-western Greece; the Caucasian group (including the Georgian, Circassian, Lesghian, and Mitsjehian idioms) in the mountain-range of the Caucasus; the Etruscan in Northern Italy; and the ancient Iberian, which was once the prevailing language of the Spanish peninsula, and which still lives on both sides of the Pyrenees in the strange language called Basque (Biscayan, or Eusearra).

ARBITRARY SIGNS

USED IN

WRITING AND PRINTING.

I. ASTRONOMICAL.

1. SUN, GREATER PLANETS, ETC.

	The Sun.
	The Moon.
	New Moon.
	First Quarter.
	Full Moon.
	Last Quarter.
	Mercury.
	Venus.
	The Earth.
	Mars.
	Jupiter.
	Saturn.
	Uranus.
	Neptune.
	Comet.
	Fixed Star.

The asteroids are now designated by numbers indicating the order of their discovery, and their symbol is a small circle inclosing this number; as, ①, Ceres; ②, Pallas; ③, Juno; ④, Vesta; and the like.

2. SIGNS OF THE ZODIAC.

Spring Signs.	1. ♈	Aries, the Ram.
	2. ♉	Taurus, the Bull.
	3. ♊	Gemini, the Twins.
Summer Signs.	4. ♋	Cancer, the Crab.
	5. ♌	Leo, the Lion.
	6. ♍	Virgo, the Virgin.
Autumn Signs.	7. ♎	Libra, the Balance.
	8. ♏	Scorpio, the Scorpion.
	9. ♐	Sagittarius, the Archer.
Winter Signs.	10. ♑	Capricornus, the Goat.
	11. ♒	Aquarius, the Waterman.
	12. ♓	Pisces, the Fishes.

3. ASPECTS AND NODES.

- ♌ Conjunction; — indicating that the bodies have the same longitude, or right ascension.
- * Sextile; — indicating a difference of 60° in longitude, or right ascension.

- Quadrature; — indicating a difference of 90° in longitude, or right ascension.
- △ Trine; — indicating a difference of 120° in longitude, or right ascension.
- ♌ Opposition; — indicating a difference of 180° in longitude, or right ascension.
- ♌ Ascending Node; — called also Dragon's Head.
- ♍ Descending Node; — called also Dragon's Tail.

II. CHEMICAL.

Every elementary substance is represented, in chemical notation, by a symbol consisting of the initial or abbreviation of its Latin name: as H for hydrogen, O for oxygen, Ag (from Argentum), for silver, and the like, each symbol, when used singly, always indicating a single atom or equivalent of the substance represented by it; thus, O stands for one atom or equivalent of oxygen, C for a single equivalent of carbon, and the others in like manner. A compound body made up of single equivalents of its constituents is represented by the two symbols of the respective constituents written side by side; as, HO, a compound of one equivalent of hydrogen with one of oxygen, forming water. To express more than one atom or equivalent of a substance, a number is used, either prefixed to the symbol, or, more commonly, written after it, below the line; as, 2O, or O₂, two equivalents of oxygen.

A secondary compound, as a salt, is indicated by writing the symbols of the constituent compounds one after another, with the sign + between them, the symbol of the base being always placed first; thus, CaO + CO₂ represents carbonate of lime. A comma is frequently used instead of the sign +, commonly to express a more intimate union than would be expressed by that sign. The period is also sometimes used to indicate a union more intimate than that denoted by the sign +, but less so than that implied by a comma. A number written before the symbol of a compound designates a corresponding number of equivalents of that compound; as, 3 SO₃, three equivalents of sulphuric acid. When the formula of the quantity contains several terms, those to which the figure applies are included in parentheses or brackets, to which the figure is prefixed; as, 3 (CaO + SO₃), three equivalents of sulphate of lime.

III. MATHEMATICAL.

THE RELATIONS OF QUANTITIES.

- + Plus; and; more; — indicating addition; as $a + b = c$; — used also to indicate that figures have been omitted from the end of a number, or that the latter is approximately exact; as, the square root of 2 is 1.4142136 +.
- Minus; less; — indicating subtraction; as, $a - b = c$.
- ±, or ∓ Plus or minus; ambiguous; indicating that the number or quantity to which it is prefixed may have either of the signs + or —; as, $a \pm b$.
- × Multiplied by; times; into; as, $a \times b = ab$; $6 \times 4 = 24$.

Multiplication is also often indicated by placing a dot between the factors, or by writing the latter, when not numerals, one after another without any sign.

÷, or : Divided by; as, $a \div b$; that is, a divided by b ; $6 \div 3 = 2$.

Division is also very often indicated by writing the divisor under the dividend, with a line between them; as, $\frac{a}{b}$; that is, a divided by b ; $\frac{6}{3} = 2$.

= Is equal to; equals; as, $(a + b) \times c = ac + bc$; $6 + 2 = 8$.

> Is greater than; as, $a > b$; that is, a is greater than b ; $6 > 5$.

< Is less than; as, $a < b$; that is, a is less than b ; $3 < 4$.

≡ Is equivalent to; — applied to magnitudes or quantities which are equal in area or volume, but are not of the same form, or capable of superposition.

~ The difference between; — used to indicate the difference between two quantities without designating which is the greater; as, $a \sim b$.

\propto Varies as; is proportional to; as, $a \propto b$.

$:$ Is to; the ratio of; } — used to indicate geometrical proportion; as, $a : b :: c : d$; that is, a is to b as c is to d .

\therefore Hence; therefore; on this account.

\because Because.

∞ Indefinitely great; infinite; infinity.

0 Indefinitely small; infinitesimal; used to denote a quantity less than any assignable quantity; also, as a numeral, naught; nothing; zero.

\angle Angle; the angle; as, $\angle A B C$.

\perp The perpendicular: perpendicular to; as, draw $A B \perp C D$.

\parallel Parallel; parallel to; is parallel to; as, $A B \parallel C D$.

\bigcirc Circle; circumference; 360° .

\triangle Triangle; the triangle; as $\triangle A B C$; that is, the triangle $A B C$.

\square Square; the square; as, $\square A B C D$; that is, the square $A B C D$.

\square Rectangle; the rectangle; as, $\square A B C D$; that is, the rectangle $A B C D$.

$\sqrt{}$, or $\sqrt{}$ Root; — indicating, when used without a figure placed above it, the square root; as, $\sqrt{4} = 2$; $\sqrt{4a^2} = 2a$. This symbol is called the radical sign. To denote any other than the square root, a figure (called the index) expressing the degree of the required root, is placed above the sign; as $\sqrt[3]{a}$, $\sqrt[5]{a}$, $\sqrt[10]{a}$, &c.

$\sqrt[n]{}$ The root of a quantity is also denoted by a fractional index at the right hand side of the quantity and above it, the denominator of the index expressing the degree of the root; as $a^{\frac{1}{2}}$, $a^{\frac{1}{3}}$, $a^{\frac{1}{5}}$; that is, the square, cube, and fifth roots of a , respectively.

— Vinculum, } indicate () Parenthesis, } that the
[], or { } Brackets, } quantities | Bar, } to which they are

applied, or which are inclosed by them, are to be taken altogether; as, $x + y^2$; $2(a + b)$; $a \times (b + c[e + d])$; $\frac{x}{y} | z$.

f , or F Function; function of; as $y = f(x)$; that is, y is, or equals, a function of x .

φ Various other letters or signs are frequently used by mathematicians to indicate functions; as, f , ϕ , ϕ' , ψ , π , and the like.

d Differential: as, dx ; that is, the differential of x .

δ Variation: as δx ; that is, the variation of x .

Δ Finite difference.

D Differential co-efficient; derivative.

\mathfrak{D} The letters d , δ , Δ , D , and sometimes others, are variously employed by different mathematicians, prefixed to quantities to denote that the differentials, variations, finite differences, or differential co-efficients of these quantities are to be taken; but the ordinary significations are those given above.

\int Integral; integral of; — indicating that the expression before which it is placed is to be integrated; as, $\int 2x dx = x^2$; that is, the integral of $2x dx$ is x^2 .

\int^n It is repeated to indicate that the operation of integration is to be performed twice, or three or more times, as $\int\int$, $\int\int\int$, &c. For a number of times greater than three, an index is commonly written at the right hand above; as, $\int^m x dx^m$; that is, the m th integral, or the result of m integrations of $x dx^m$.

\int_a^b denotes that the integral is to be taken between the value b of the variable and its value a . \int^a denotes that the integral ends at the value a of the variable, and \int that it begins at the value b . These forms must not be confounded with the similar one indicating repeated integration, or with that indicating the integral with respect to a particular variable.

Σ Sum; algebraic sum; — commonly used to indicate the sum or summation of finite differences, and in nearly the same manner as the symbol \sum .

ϵ Residual.

π The number 3.14159265 +; the ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter, of a semicircle to its radius, and of the area of a circle to the square of its radius. In a circle whose radius is unity, it is equal to the semi-circumference, and hence is used to designate an arc of 180° .

$^\circ$ Degrees; as, 60° ; that is, sixty degrees.

$'$ Minutes of arc; as, $30'$; that is, thirty minutes.

$''$ Seconds of arc; as, $20''$; that is, twenty seconds.

$'$, $''$, $'''$, &c. Accents used to mark quantities of the same kind which are to be distinguished; as, a' , a'' , a''' , &c., which are usually read a prime, a second, a third, etc.; $a b' c'' + a' b'' c + a'' b c'$.

1 , 2 , 3 , &c. Indices placed above and at the right hand of quantities to denote that they are raised to powers whose degree is indicated by the figure; as, a^1 ; that is, the first power of a ; a^2 , the square or second power of a ; a^3 , the cube or third power of a ; and the like.

IV. MEDICAL.

\mathfrak{C} , or $+$ A sign of the cross used by the pope, and by Roman Catholic bishops and archbishops, immediately before the subscription of their names. In Roman Catholic service-books, it is used in those places of the prayers and benediction where the priest is to make the sign of the cross.

\times , or $+$ A character customarily made by persons unable to write, when they are required to execute instruments of any kind, as deeds, affidavits, &c. The name of the party is added by some one who can write; as, his mark.

4to, or 4° . Quarto; four leaves, or eight pages, to a sheet.

8vo, or 8° . Octavo; eight leaves, or sixteen pages, to a sheet.

12mo, or 12° . Duodecimo; twelve leaves, or twenty-four pages, to a sheet.

16mo, or 16° . Sexto-decimo; sixteen leaves, or thirty-two pages, to a sheet.

18mo, or 18° . Octavo-decimo; eighteen leaves, or thirty-six pages, to a sheet.

\mathfrak{V} Other sizes are 24mo, or 24° (Vigesimo-quarto), 32mo, or 32° (Trigesimo-seculo), 36mo, or 36° (Trigesimo-sexto), 48mo, or 48° (Quadragesimo-octavo), 64mo, or 64° (Sexagesimo-quarto), 72mo, or 72° (Septuagesimo-seculo), 96mo, or 96° (Nonagesimo-sexto), 128mo, or 128° (Centesimo et vigesimo-octavo). These sizes are of rare occurrence, and are not commonly known by their Latin names, but are colloquially called twenty-four-mo, thirty-two-mo, &c., or twenty-fours, thirty-twos, &c.

A CONCISE ACCOUNT

OF THE

CHIEF DEITIES, HEROES, ETC., IN THE GREEK AND ROMAN MYTHOLOGY.

- AB'A-RĪS. A Scythian priest of Apollo, said to have ridden through the air on an arrow.
- A-ĈĒS'TĒS. A king of Sicily, who entertained Æneas and Anchises.
- A-CHÆ'US. Son of Xuthus, from whom the Achæans, a Grecian tribe, were descended.
- A-CHĀ'TĒS. A trusty friend and companion of Æneas.
- ĀCH'E-RŌN. Son of Sol and Terra, transformed into a river in the infernal regions.
- A-CHĪL'LĒS. A Grecian hero, distinguished for his warlike prowess, and invulnerable except in his right heel; but at length slain by Paris, in the Trojan war. He was the son of Peleus and Thetis.
- Ā'ĈIS. The son of Faunus, a Sicilian shepherd, who was killed by Polyphemus, because he had obtained the affections of Galatæa.
- Æ-TÆ'ON. A celebrated hunter, who, having seen Diaua bathing, was changed into a stag and hunted down by his own hounds.
- AD-MĒ'TUS. A king of Phæræ, in Thessaly, and husband of Alcestis.
- A-DŌ'NIS. A Cyprian youth famed for his beauty and beloved by Venus, but torn in pieces by a wild boar.
- Æ'A-EUS. Son of Jupiter and Europa, famed for his justice and piety. After death he was made one of the judges in the infernal regions.
- Æ-ĜĒ'RĪ-Ā. See Egeria.
- Æ-ĜÆ'US. A king of Athens, who gave his name to the Ægean sea, in which he was drowned.
- Æ'GLE. 1. One of the Hesperides. 2. The fairest of the Naiads.
- Æ-ĜY'P'TUS. A king of Egypt, whose fifty sons, with the exception of Lynceus, were slain on their wedding night by their wives, the daughters of Danaus.
- Æ-NĒ'AS. A Trojan warrior, son of Venus and Anchises. He is distinguished for his pious care of his father at the capture of Troy; and his adventures form the subject of Virgil's Æneid.
- Æ'O-LUS. The god or ruler of the winds, who resided in the islands between Italy and Sicily.
- ÆS'EU-LĀ'PI-US. Son of Apollo, and god of the healing art.
- ĀG'A-MĒM'NON. Brother of Menelaus, and commander of the Grecian forces against Troy. He was murdered by his wife Clytæmnestra, with the aid of Ægisthus, her paramour. See CLYTÆMNESTRA.
- ĀG'A-NĪP'PE. A fountain at the foot of Mount Helicon, sacred to the Muses.
- Ā'JAX. 1. A son of Telamon, and one of the bravest of the Greeks in the Trojan war. 2. A Greek renowned for his bravery in the Trojan war. He was the son of Oileus, and king of the Locri.
- AL-ĈĒS'TIS. Wife of Admetus, to preserve whose life she resigned her own. She was afterward, however, brought back from the lower world by Hercules.
- AL-ĈĪ'DĒS. A name of Hercules.
- AL-E-MĒ'NĀ. Wife of Amphitryon, and mother of Hercules by Jupiter.
- AL-ĈY'O-NĒ. A daughter of Æolus, who drowned herself in grief for the loss of her husband, and was turned into a king-fisher.
- A-LĒC'TO. One of the Furies.
- ĀM'MON. A title of Jupiter.
- AM-PHĪ'ON. A Theban prince who cultivated the art of music with such success that, at the sound of his lyre, stones came together, and formed the walls of Thebes.
- ĀM'PHI-TRĪ'TE. Daughter of Nereus and Doris, and wife of Neptune.
- AN-ĈÆ'US. A king of the Samians, who, leaving a cup of wine untasted to pursue a boar by which he was killed, gave rise to the proverb, "There 's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip."
- AN-CHĪ'SĒS. The father of Æneas by Venus.
- AN-DRŌM'A-CHĒ. The wife of Hector, distinguished for her domestic virtues.
- AN-DRŌM'E-DĀ. Daughter of the Ethiopian king Cepheus. Her mother, Cassiope, having boasted herself fairer than Juno, Andromeda was exposed to a sea-monster, but was rescued by Perseus, who married her.
- AN-TÆ'US. A monarch of Libya, of gigantic size and strength, slain by Hercules.
- ĀN'TE-RŌS. The god who avenges slighted love.
- AN-TĪG'O-NE. A daughter of Œdipus and Jocasta, famous for her filial piety.
- A-NŪ'BIS. An Egyptian god, represented as having the head of a dog.
- ĀPH'RO-DĪ'TE. The Greek name of Venus.
- Ā'PIS. The Egyptian god of industry, worshiped under the form of an ox.
- A-PŌL'LO. A deity of the Greeks and Romans, worshiped as the sun-god. He was also god of medicine, divination, archery, and poetry, and presided over the Muses.

- ŌR'PIE-US, or ŌR'PHEŪS. A poet, musician, and philosopher, whose skill in music was such that the very rocks and trees followed him.
- O-SĪ'RIS. An Egyptian deity, the husband of Isis, worshiped under the form of an ox.
- ŌS'SĀ. A lofty mountain of Thessaly, which the giants, in their war against the gods, piled upon Mount Pelion, in their attempt to scale heaven.
- PAC-TŌ'LUS. A celebrated river of Lydia, in which Midas washed himself when his touch turned every thing to gold, from which cause it ever after rolled golden sands.
- PĀL'A-MĒ'DĒŒ. A king of Eubœa, and one of the Greeks before Troy, where he lost his life through the machinations of Ulysses, whose feigned madness (feigned that he might avoid going to war) he had discovered.
- PĀ'LĒŒ. The goddess of husbandry and cattle.
- PĀL'I-NŪ'RUS. The pilot of Æneas, noted for falling asleep at the helm, and tumbling into the sea.
- PAL-LĀ'DI-UM. A wooden image of Pallas, on the possession of which the security of Troy was supposed to depend. It was stolen from Troy by Ulysses and Diomedes.
- PĀL'LĀS. A name of Minerva.
- PĀN. The god of the woods and of shepherds; son of Mercury and Penelope.
- PAN-DŌ'RĀ. The first woman, made by Vulcan at the command of Jupiter, and endowed by Venus with great beauty. Jupiter gave her a box containing all kinds of misfortunes; curiosity tempted her to open it and they all flew out; but Hope remained at the bottom.
- PĀR'ĈÆ. The goddesses of fate; the Fates.
- PĀ'RIS, or PĀR'IS. Son of Priam, king of Troy, and of Hecuba. He decided a contest of beauty between Juno, Pallas, and Venus, in favor of the last, who, in return, promised him Helen, the wife of Menelaus, and the most beautiful of women. By carrying her off to Troy, he brought on the Trojan war.
- PAR-THĒN'O-PĒ. One of the three Sirens. She fell in love with Ulysses, and not winning him, cast herself into the sea, and was thrown by the waves on the shore where Naples afterwards stood.
- PA-TRŌ'ELUS. One of the Greeks before Troy, the friend of Achilles, slain in single combat by Hector.
- PĒG'A-SUS. A winged steed, belonging to Apollo and the Muses. He sprang from the blood of Medusa, when she was slain.
- PĒ'LOPS. A king of Phrygia, and son of Tantalus. When a child he was served up to the gods by his father; but was restored to life by Jupiter, who gave him a shoulder of ivory in place of one eaten by Ceres.
- PE-NĀ'TĒŒ. Old Latin guardian gods of the household, and of the state as being formed of a union of households.
- PE-NĒL'O-PĒ. The wife of Ulysses, who, being pressed by suitors during his absence, made them promise to delay until she finished a web which she was then weaving, and of which she unraveled at night what she wove by day.
- PĒR'DIX. The nephew of Dædalus, thrown from a tower by his uncle, and changed by Minerva into a partridge.
- PĒR'SE-US, or PĒR'SEŪS. Son of Ju-

- pit^{er} and Danaë, who was made a constellation. He vanquished the Gorgons and performed many wonderful deeds by means of Medusa's head.
- PHĀ'E-TON. Son of Phœbus and Clymene, who obtained permission from his father to drive his chariot for a single day; but, being unable to manage the fiery steeds, was hurled by Jupiter into the river Eridanus, to prevent a general conflagration.
- PHĪL/O-C-TĒ'TĒS. Son of Poeas, of Thessaly, and a celebrated archer. Hereules, at his death, gave him some poisoned arrows without which Troy could not be taken.
- PHĪL/O-MĒ'LĀ. Daughter of Pandion, king of Athens. She was changed into a nightingale.
- PHĪN'E-US, or PHĪ'NEŪS. A sooth-saying king of Thrace, who, having blinded and imprisoned his children on a false accusation, was himself struck blind and tormented by the Harpies.
- PHĪN'TI-AS. A Pythagorean of Syracuse, noted for his tender friendship for Damon.
- PHĪĒG'E-THŌN. A river in Hades which ran with fire instead of water.
- PHĪLĒ'GY-AS. A king of the Lapithæ, who, having burnt the temple of Apollo, was placed in hell under a great stone, apparently about to fall at every moment.
- PHŒ'BE. A name of Diana, as goddess of the moon.
- PHŒ'BUS. A name of Apollo, as god of the sun.
- PHŒ'NIX. A fabulous bird, which, according to Herodotus, visited Heliopolis, in Egypt, once in every five hundred years. It had no mate, but when about to die made a nest and burned itself to ashes, from which a young phoenix arose.
- PĪ-ĒR'I-DĒS. 1. A name given to the Muses from Mount Pierius. 2. The daughters of Pierius, whom the Muses changed into magpies for challenging them to sing.
- PĪ-RĪTH'O-US. Son of Ixion, king of the Lapithæ, husband of Hippodamia, and intimate friend of Theseus.
- PLĒ'IA-DĒS. The seven daughters of Atlas and Pleione, transformed into the constellation of the same name.
- PLŪ'TO. The god of Hades, or the lower world; son of Saturn and Ops, brother of Jupiter and Neptune, and husband of Proserpina.
- PLŪ'TUS. The god of wealth, represented as lame in his approach, but winged in his departure.
- PŌL'LUX. A famous pugilist, son of Tyndarus and Leda, and twin brother of Castor. See CASTOR.
- PO-LŪD'A-MĀS. A famous athlete.
- PŌL'Y-DŌRE, or PŌL'Y-DŌ'RUS. A son of Priam and Hecuba, killed for his riches by the Thracian king Polymnestor.
- PŌL'Y-HŪM'NI-Ā, or PO-LŪM'NI-Ā. The Muse who presided over singing and rhetoric.
- PŌL'Y-PHĒ'MUS. A cruel giant who had but one eye, in the middle of his forehead, which Ulysses burnt out with a firebrand, having first made him drunk. He was one of the Cyclops, and a son of Neptune.
- PO-MŌ'NĀ. The goddess of orchards and fruits.
- PRĪ'AM. Son of Laomedon, husband of Hecuba, and father of Hector, Paris, &c. He was the last king of Troy, the city having been taken by the Greeks during his reign.
- PRĪ-Ā'PUS. The god of gardens and vineyards, and of procreation.
- PRO-ĒRŪS'TĒS. A savage highwayman of Attica, who placed his captives on a couch, and, if too short, stretched them out to fit it; but if they were too long, he cut off their legs.
- PRŌG'NE. Daughter of Pandion, king of Athens, wife of Tereus, and sister of Philomela. She was changed into a swallow.
- PRO-MĒ'THĒ-US, or PRO-MĒ'THĒŪS. Son of Iapetus and Clymene, cousin to Epimetheus, and father of Deucalion. Having stolen fire from heaven, he was bound fast on Mount Caucasus and tormented by a vulture, which fed continually upon his liver.
- PRO-SĒR'PI-NĀ, or PRŌS'ER-PĪNE. Daughter of Jupiter and Ceres, wife of Pluto and queen of Hell.
- PRŌ'TE-US, or PRŌ'TEŪS. A sea-god who foretold future events, and possessed the power of transforming himself into various shapes.
- PSŪ'CHĒ (sī'ke). A nymph beloved by Cupid, and made immortal by Jupiter.
- PŪG'MĒS. A nation of dwarfs, in Africa, only a span high. Every spring they were attacked and defeated by the cranes.
- PYG-MĀ'LI-ON. 1. Son of Belus, king of Tyre, and brother of Dido, whose husband, Sichæus, he slew for his money. 2. Great-grandson of Belus, who made a statue of which he became so enamored, that Venus on his entreaty gave it life.
- PŪL'A-DĒS. A most constant friend of Orestes.
- PŪR'A-MUS. A Babylonian, the lover of Thisbe. On account of her supposed death he stabbed himself under a mulberry tree; and she, finding his corpse, put an end to her life on the same spot and with the same weapon.
- PŪR'RĪĀ. See DEUCALION.
- PŪR'RĪUS. Son of Achilles and Deidamia. He distinguished himself at the siege of Troy by his cruelty and vindictiveness as well as bravery. At the instigation of his wife he was slain by Orestes.
- PŪTH'I-AS. [Properly Phintias.] See PHINTIAS.
- PŪ'THON. A huge serpent, killed near Delphi, by Apollo, who instituted the Pythian games in commemoration of the event.
- QUĪ-RĪ'NUS. A name given to Romulus after his death and deification.
- RĒ'MUS. The twin brother of Romulus, slain by him for leaping in scorn over the walls of Rome when they were building.
- RĪĀD'A-MĀN'THUS. A law-giver of Crete, son of Jupiter, and brother of Minos. He was famous for his justice and equity, and was, therefore, after death, made one of the judges in the lower world.
- RĪĒ'Ā. Another name of Cybele.
- RŌM'U-LUS. A son of Mars and Rhea Silvia. His uncle threw him as soon as born into the Tiber, but he was saved and brought up by a shepherd, and finally became the founder and first king of Rome.
- SAL-MŌ'NĒ-US, or SAL-MŌ'NEŪS. A king of Elis, struck by lightning for imitating the thunder-bolts of Jove.
- SAR-PĒ'DON. A son of Jupiter and Europa, and king of Lycia, who distinguished himself at the siege of Troy, and was killed by Patroclus.
- SĀT'URN. Son of Cœlus and Terra, and father of Jupiter. Having been banished from the throne of heaven by his son, he fled for safety into Italy, and taught the people agriculture and the useful arts. The time in which he did this is called The Golden Age.
- SĀ'TYRS. Lascivious sylvan deities, with horns and goats' feet.
- SĀYL'LĀ. 1. A daughter of Phœreys, changed by Circe, out of jealousy, into a sea-monster, with dogs about the haunches, and placed on a rock on the Italian coast, opposite Charibdis on the coast of Sicily. 2. A daughter of Nisus of Megara, beloved by Minos, for whom she cut off from her father's head a purple lock, on which his life depended; for which crime she was changed into a lark.
- SĒM'E-LĒ. Daughter of Cadmus, and mother of Bacchus by Jupiter.
- SĪ-LĒ'NUS. The foster-father of Bacchus; lascivious and addicted to drunkenness, but regarded as the god of abstruse mysteries and knowledge. He is represented as bald-headed, with short horns and a flat nose, and as riding on an ass.
- SIL-VĀ'NUS. See SYLVANUS.
- SĪ'RENS. Three birds, with the faces of virgins, on the southern coast of Italy, where with their sweet voices they enticed ashore those who were sailing by, and then killed them. They were daughters of Oceanus and Parthenope, and their names were Leucasia, Ligeia, and Parthenope.
- SĪS'Y-PHUS. Son of Æolus, king of Corinth, and a noted robber, killed by Theseus. For his crimes, he was condemned in hell to roll to the top - of a hill a huge stone, which constantly fell back again to the bottom.

- SÖL. A name of Apollo.
- SÖM'NUS. A son of Erebus and Nox, and the god of sleep.
- SPIÏYX. A fabulous monster near Thebes, with the head of a woman, the body of a lion, and the wings of a bird, which put forth riddles to passers by, and devoured all who were unable to solve them; Œdipus solved one proposed to him, whereupon she destroyed herself.
- STËN'TÖR. One of the Greeks before Troy. His voice is said to have been as loud as the voices of fifty men together.
- STÏX. A river in the infernal regions, by which the gods swore their most solemn oaths.
- SYL-VÄ'NUS. A Roman deity who presided over woods and all places planted with trees.
- TÄN'TA-LUS. A king of Phrygia, son of Jupiter, and father of Niobe and Pelops. For his misdeeds he was placed in a lake of water which receded whenever he attempted to drink, and under a tree laden with all manner of delicious fruits, which always eluded his grasp.
- TÄR'TA-RUS. The place of punishment in Hades, or the lower world.
- TËL'A-MON. One of the Argonauts, son of Æacus, brother of Peleus, and father of Ajax and Tencer. He was king of Salamis, and first scaled the walls, when Hercules took the city of Troy in the reign of Laomedon.
- TË-LËM'A-CHUS. The only son of Ulysses and Penelope. He went in search of his father after the siege of Troy.
- TËL'LUS. The earth personified; the most ancient of all the deities after Chaos. She is represented as a woman with many breasts distended with milk.
- TËM'PE. A valley of Thessaly through which ran the river Peneus, between Ossa and Pelion; described by the poets as the most delightful spot on the earth.
- TËR'MI-NUS. A divinity at Rome, who was supposed to preside over bounds and limits, and to punish all unlawful usurpations of land.
- TERP-SICH'O-RË. The Muse who presided over dancing.
- TË'THYS. Wife of Oceanus, and mother of the sea-nymphs and river-gods.
- THA-LÏ'Ä. 1. One of the Muses; the Muse of comedy. 2. One of the three Graces.
- THË'MIS. The daughter of Cœlus and Terra, and goddess of justice, who rewarded virtue and punished vice.
- THË'SE-US, or THË'SEÛS. King of Athens and one of the most famous heroes of antiquity. He was the son of Ægeus (or, as some say, of Neptune) and Æthra, husband of Ariadne and afterward of Phædra, and father of Hippolytus by the Amazonian Hippolyte. He was especially noted for slaying the Minotaur and conquering the Centaurs, and for his friendship for Pirithous.
- THÏS'BE. See PYRAMUS.
- TÏ-SIPH'O-NE. One of the three Furies.
- TÏ'TAN. 1. Son of Cœlus and Terra, elder brother of Saturn, and father of a race of giants called Titans, who contended with Saturn for the sovereignty of heaven, until Jupiter (Saturn's son), cast them by his thunderbolts into Tartarus. 2. A grandson of the above, and son of Hyperion; the sun-god. 3. A name given to Prometheus, as grandson of Titan.
- TÏ-TIÖ'NUS. Son of Laomedon and father of Memnon, by Aurora, who endowed him with immortality, and when he had become very old and decrepit turned him into a grasshopper.
- TÏT'Y-US. A son of Jupiter, slain by Apollo for an attempt on the chastity of Latona, and condemned, in the infernal regions, to have a vulture forever feeding on his liver, which was perpetually renewed. He was a giant of size so huge that his body, when stretched out, covered nine acres of land.
- TRIP-TÖL'E-MÛS. A king of Eleusis, who was the inventor of agriculture, and became a judge in the lower world.
- TRÏ'TON. Son of Neptune and the nymph Salacia; a sea-god, and Neptune's trumpeter.
- TRÖ'I-LUS. Son of Priam and Hecuba, slain by Achilles.
- TRO-PHÖ'NI-US. A deity who imparted oracles in a cave near Lebædia, in Bœotia. He was the builder of Apollo's temple at Delphi.
- TÜR'NUS. A king of the Rutuli, in Italy, killed by Æneas.
- TÏD'E-ÛS, or TÏ'DEÛS. A king of Calydon, son of Æneus, and father of Diomedes; celebrated for his victory over Eteocles, king of Thebes.
- TÏ'PHON,
TÏ-PHO'E-US, or TÏ-PHÖ'EÛS. } A famous giant, struck with lightning by Jupiter, and buried under Mount Ætna.
